SOLOMON BLOOMGARDEN ("YEHOASH")

Scarcely had the Jewish world recovered from the shock of the death of Ahad Ha'am, when another blow fell Yehoash, one of the rarest and most beloved personalities in Jewish literature, and one of the finest exemplars of its creative possibilities, passed away.

The sense of personal loss in this case strikes one even more poignantly than the realization of the trememdous loss which Jewish letters have sustained.

Yehoash was a many-sided genius. He was a poet of the highest order. He was a scholar of the most meticulous type. He was a thinker endowed with power of flashing penetration, and broad laborious analysis. But to those who had the privilege of knowing him intimately, he was the lovable, kindly friend, the sagacious mentor, the scintillating conversationalist, the high-minded exponent of literary purity and nobility. No one who had been in his presence even for a brief period could help but feel that here was a man who embodied in his life and his thought—in his very personality—the high standards and ideals which prevail only in the purer realms of letters. Yehoash the man, one could instantly realize, was the personification of the striving and yearning for the ineffable graces of emotion and purities of thought which characterized his feverish literary activity. And to meet Yehoash was to love him and admire him, even as one must love and admire truth and beauty when they are perceived.

In the realm of poetry Yehoash achieved a unique position which no other poets in modern Jewish literature could approach. His poetry lacked the direct force and simplicity of perception which marked the poetry of Simon Frug. It lacked the immediateness and welling emotionalism of Morris Rosenfield. It lacked the burning passion and cyclonic rage of Bialik. His poetry at its best was a delicately modelled blending of wisps of elusive sentimentality, daubs of nebulous mysticism, flashes of sagacious insight, semi-tones of cosmic longing, fragments of wordly wisdom, all proportioned after the pattern of life's challenging mysteriousness.

Before the war Yehoash's poetry was more simple in theme and manner of handling. He wrote of love; he wrote of Jewish martyrdom; he wrote of Jewish legends; he wrote fables; he wrote songs for children. And in these simple poems he attained heights of near perfection. He was crowned with the laurels of classicism. But his restless longing for fulness, for completeness, his eagerness to pry out the meaning of the difficulties and complexities of the human spirit urged him on to seek ever new modes of interpretation and forms of expression.

And we behold the remarkable phenomenom: Yehoash, a poet of the first rank, oriented in classical standards, suddenly becomes aware of the beat of a new rhythm in the post-war world. He discards all his classical forms and ideals, and sets out to become the interpreter of the new life and its new tempo. Yeoash's poetry undergoes a complete metamorphosis. It becomes ultra-modern. It grapples with the subtlest nuances of the hectic struggle of the new generation for self-understanding and expression.

And this change in Yehoash is not a gesture. On many occasions Yehoash expressed to the writer his disgust with his own earlier products—the products which had won for him the foremost place in Jewish poetry. He was aware of their shortcomings, of their myopic deficiencies. Yehoash diligently applied himself to the study of all phases of modern existence. He would not allow his mind to be enslaved by traditions or habit. He forced it to keep on plodding and toiling among the ranks of the younger spirits struggling for a place in life. He wanted to keep it young and active, and in sympathy with the youthful genius which is shaping the destiny of our generation. He succeeded in becoming a poet of the young. He was the youngest of the young.

Yeoash's capacity for self-discipline and intellectual alertness showed itself in his stupendous achievement in the field of scholarship. Yeoash alone, unaided, racked by a deadening disease, undertook and almost completed the translation of the entire Bible from Hebrew into Yiddish! This translation is a monumental accomplishment. When we remember that it took a whole army of writers a number of years to make the King James translation of the Bible into English, that it took a number of scholars several years to complete the new Jewish Publication Society translation into English—when we remember these facts we can realise what a tremendous task it was for one man to do what Yehoash did.

Yehoash's translation is recognized by all critics as an unparalleled triumph of poetic and scholarly achievement. Yehoash carried over from Hebrew into Yiddish the atmosphere that pervades the original. He had to create in the Yiddish language a rhythm and a terminology that could save the subtle flavour of the various styles of the writing of the Bible. Yehoash's translation is a new dressing of the Bible completely in the spirit and fashion of the original. And withal the translation embodies the latest and most scientific research on the subject of the Bible. Yehoash has not overlooked a single authority, a work of reference or commentary in his interpretation of the texts. Rabbis and lay scholars alike have come to recognize Yehoash as the greatest authority on the Bible and Bible criticism. His footnotes and comments are treasure troves of erudition which have a value of their own.

During the last few years of his life, in the throes of his disease, he worked indefatigably, day and night to complete his Bible. He had plans, if his life were spared, of undertaking, as his next task, the translation of the Koran from the original into Yiddish. On the morning of his sudden death, his friends found on his table an open Bible and an open Koran. Alas! he did not have time quite to complete the Bible.

Yehoash was the greatest poet in the Yiddish language. He was a linguist and a scholar of the highest rank. He was a modern man, in the fullest sense of the term, alive to every interest and phenomenon in modern life. And his fine qualities of mind were embodied in his character and personality. He was one of the noblest men and dearest friends that any man of this generation could hope to know. The Jewish literary world has lost one of its very finest personalities.

Protest Against Roumanian Pogroms

Protest from Montreal Jewry against the violation of life, property and rights of its race in Rumania, was made at a meeting, Sunday, January 16, at the Monument National under the chairmanship of Lyon Cohen, honorary president of the Jewish Community Council. Speakers were: Lyon Cohen; Rabbi Hirsch Cohen, head of the Rabbinical Council, of Montreal; Rabbi H. Abramowitz, president of the United Synagogues of America; Rev. Dr. P. H. Lamartine of the Mance Street Lutheran Church; H. M. Caiserman, Alderman Joseph Shubert, S. W. Jacobs, L. Zucker, H. Bataky. Letters from Joseph Cohen, Hon. Rudolph Monty and E. W. Sayer were read. The resolution, moved by Lyon Cohen, and seconded by Alderman Shubert, in the presence of 1,200 people, set forth in part that the meeting protested against the government of Rumania "which has failed to suppress the organized anti-Semitic student movement, under the leadership of Professor Cuza, and the so-called Christian League, which is understood to be receiving moral encouragement and financial support from the government."

Reference was also made to "the flagrant violation by Rumania of the Peace Treaty of the League of Nations" in respect of civil, political, linguistic and religious rights of inhabitants, "obnoxious discriminations" in regard to the Jews being charged. Failure of the Rumanian government to punish perpetrators of outrages was denounced. "The present is only a repetition of Rumania's continued unfriendly attitude," declared the resolution; "she has violated the Treaty of Berlin of 1878, and the sufferings which she caused to the Jews then aroused the profound sympathy of the civilized world."

A writer in the American Mercury on the subject of the press agent gives the Jews of New York credit for being the most insatiable of the battlers for publicity. He tells of how their endless enterprises pour out a vast and terrifying flood of press matter which, if sold for its junk value alone, would realize enough money to rebuild the Temple of Solomon. He says the bulk and persistence of Jewish publicity matter make it a nuisance to editors, and that the majority of the tribe of press agents are simply pests, incompetent newspaper men who make easy money out of the space that belongs to someone else. The writer gives a list of Jewish organizations that send press stuff to the papers, including the Jewish Tribune and Hebrew Standard, for which may his shadow never grow less, for which may the gods make him happy without intending to destroy him! The cat is now officially and publicly out of the bag about the Jewish Tribune's annual "educational contests" by which it gains space in the foremost dailies.

The writer of the article also named these as lusting for the free spaces: The Jewish Sabbath Alliance of America (Agudath Tomchai Shabboz), Jewish Survey Commission, Bikur Choilim Convalescent Home, United Synagogues of America, Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies, Home for Hebrew Infants, Menorah Home for the Aged and Infirm, Jewish Holidays' Press Notice Bureau, Order of the Sons of Zion, Congregation Bnai Jeshurun, Jewish Big Brothers, Yeshiva College Building Fund, Union of American Hebrew Congregations, Hebrew National Orphan Home, American Jewish Congress, Zeta Beta Tau Club, United Palestine Appeal, Negro Synagogue of Beth Bnai Abraham, Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, Congregation Ohab Zedek, Independent Order Bnai Brith, First Jewish Ladies' Day Nursery, Hebrew Union College School for Teachers, Portuguese Congregation Shearith Israel, Congregation Kol Israel of Poland, Young Men's Hebrew Association, Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Seminary, Training School for Jewish Social Work, Mizrachi Organization of America, United Jewish Campaign, Joint Distribution Committee, Beth David Hospital, Beth Abraham Home for Incurables, Israel Orphan Asylum, Brooklyn Jewish Center, Society for Hebrew Nervous Diseases, Jewish Theological Seminary of America, Hebrew Shelter and Guardian Society, World Zionist Organization, Palestine Economic Corporation, Jewish Biographical Bureau, Inwood Hebrew Congregation, Jewish Theatrical Guild, Congregation Mt. Neboh, Young Judaea, Hebrew Free Loan Society, Temple Emanu-El, Society Bnai David, Hebrew Day Nursery, Palestine Foundation Fund, American Committee of 100 of the Yeshivah of America.

The writer must have forgotten many of the rabbis even in distant cities, the Council of Jewish Women and the Temple Sisterhoods. The trick is to know them all by their envelopes and save that much time.

Some of Toronto's Christian clergymen refused to comment on the terrible theatre tragedy in Montreal except to express sympathy for the bereaved. The diffidence of these, however, was more than made up for by other men of God who, when questioned by reporters, came forward to do justice to the cloth.

Said Rev. Dr. J. G. Inkster, of Knox Presbyterian Church: "The awful happening should be a warning to people to make them think seriously as to spending the one day in seven in amusement seeking. I think it unfortunate that children should come to their death in a theatre on a Sunday afternoon. A Sunday school would have been a better place for them to be in. I think it is a reflection on the church that they should have been found there." Rev. A. J. Paul, of Hope United Church, was a trifle less sure that the tragedy was an act of God, but suspicious withal: "I'm opposed to Sunday movie shows at the outset," he declared. "I don't think they ought to be permitted. In the olden days they would say that was a sort of warning. I don't know if we in these modern times are prepared for the same light. All these things bring their own judgment." Rev. J. E. Gibson, of the Church of the Ascension, said: "People outside Ontario are inclined to deride our quiet Sunday. Perhaps they may see that after all it has its advantages. I believe in certain liberties as to Sunday and am not rigid, but this tragedy is perhaps an example of what may happen if we open it up to amusement seeking." Rev. J. J. Coulter, of the Danforth Avenue United Church, was too cautious even to deliver a sermon against Sunday amusements. "I wouldn't like to say that there is a moral lesson," he said with admirable reticence. "A person has to remember that the Empress of Ireland went down with a load of Salvation Army officers on board."

The sanest comment on the tragedy came from Rev. Father Burke, of St. Peter's R.C. Church. He did not snatch the opportunity to spread the good word about a quiet Sunday, nor theorize upon the right of a mere human being to explain the calamity as a special divine expression of wrath. He thought the catastrophe emphasized the necessity of vigilance in fire prevention. He said: "Young people are inside enough and there is no reason why they should be housed up every day in the week." A refreshing hesitancy to tell the world what God meant to do that Sunday. f.f.c

The High Rating of Power Securities

Electricity is daily becoming a more formidable competitor of other sources of power which, until recent years, had been considered in an impregnable position because of their cheapness.

In pace with the growing use of electricity, the securities of power companies have been steadily rising in the estimation of experienced investors, until they now occupy a place second only to Government securities.

Let us furnish you with details of two highly desirable power investments.
